

Master of Science in Applied Analytics: Application Checklist (International Student)

Please note that unless you are already in the United States, Loras cannot issue an I-20 to any international student completing a fully online master's degree (such as this one). You may still be admitted into this program, but you would need to complete the degree from your home country.

- ☐ Admission criteria and eligibility information:
 - Students are eligible for this degree regardless of their undergraduate major. Programming knowledge/experience is not required, but familiarity with statistics is beneficial. It's a myth that you need to be an expert in math or programming in order to effectively analyze data. Programming is useful for doing data analysis, but not necessary. Nor is it sufficient. Using data to improve decision-making requires actionable insight. This means understanding where analytics can improve decisions, obtaining the appropriate data, understanding what it does/does not measure, shaping it into an appropriate form, building useful predictive or explanatory models, and communicating the insight to multiple audiences: customers, employees, owners, communities, and beyond. Actionable insight also requires using your existing knowledge to ask the tough questions needed to move your organization or business forward. The M.S. in Applied Analytics is designed to provide and sharpen this skill-set for working professionals.
- ☐ Graduate Program application:

- ☐ Copy of your passport photo:

Loras College accepts evaluations directly from either Educational Credential Evaluators, Inc. (<https://www.ece.org/ECE>) or Foreign Credits, Inc. (<https://www.foreigncredits.com/>). You should contact Graduate Admissions if you have already received a foreign credential evaluation report from an organization other than ECE or Foreign Credits.
